Town Hires New Assistant Engineer

Jonathan Ham joined the Town of Garner earlier this month as assistant town engineer.

Ham holds a bachelor's degree in biological engineering from North Carolina State University and earned a master's degree in business administration from the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. He has been licensed as a professional engineer (P.E.) since 2009.

As the assistant town engineer, Ham will be assuming numerous duties, including doing plan reviews, supplying technical assistance on stormwater issues, administering the Town's flood plain management program, assisting with project management of Town-funded construction and providing development services.

"Jonathan's experience, coming from his other work on utilities, will only add to the Engineering Department's expertise and will aid him in doing plan reviews for the Town," said Town Engineer Tony Chalk.

Prior to joining the Town of Garner Engineering Department, Ham was the project engineer/project manager for the Cape Fear Public Utility Authority in Wilmington for five and a half years. He has also worked for ESP Associates as an engineering project manager and for Tripp Engineering as a staff engineer.
